Current research indicates that women are underrepresented in top leadership positions and decision-making roles, are often undervalued, and receive less compensation than their male counterparts - but why? To reach the highest levels of development, it is essential for women to recognize, understand, and transform common business challenges and strategic priorities into opportunities, bringing value to their organizations.

Facing challenges of managing careers and personal goals, women sometimes struggle with how to develop their own leadership styles and effectively embrace their power and status within an organization or as an entrepreneur.

At Manhattanville School of Business, our vision is to provide any woman with the skills and resources to succeed, and a place where women collaborate to define, create, and expand leadership opportunities by taking ownership and developing executive presence. It is our mission to advance the personal and professional development of women by offering a comprehensive array of educational programs, mentoring and coaching, and training.

- Leadership education opportunities that deepen the understanding of critical women's issues
